Are you struggling with dry, scaly skin?

Eczema and Dermatitis are common skin conditions that most likely will result in a rash. There are many causes of these conditions, including allergic reactions, friction, prolonged exposure to heat and moisture, or contact with irritants, such as harsh chemicals.

Allergic Contact Dermatitis

is a particular type of dermatitis that can occur after contact with an allergen. Itching and blistering can typically appear within a few days of exposure. Poisonous plants are the most common causes of allergic reactions in the United States effecting millions of Americans each year. Other common causes include metals, dyes, cosmetics, preservatives and fragrances. Identifying and removing these causes can relieve symptoms along with the use of corticosteroids and topicals which can be prescribed by your dermatologist.

is the most common form of eczema, characterized by patches of dry, red skin that may have scales and/or crust which is often accompanied by intense itching. Eczema usually occurs on the face, neck, and the insides of elbows, knees and ankles. An estimated 60% of people develop it in their first year of life, and 90% develop it before age 5. In the United States alone, atopic dermatitis affects at least 28 million people of all ages.

Although there is no cure for atopic dermatitis, proper treatment can control the symptoms to keep the skin moist, reduce inflammation and minimize the itch. Effective treatment often requires a multifaceted approach that includes medication, proper skin care, coping mechanisms and avoiding known causes.

Our providers at East Valley Dermatology Center can evaluate your treatment options, including new and emerging therapies including Patch Testing which can help you determine the treatment plan that is best for your condition.
